Paradigm Source Library License Agreement 1.0

This library is a licensed product. By opening the envelope containing the Cd's/disk(s) you indicate that you have read and agree to the terms of the following license. This product is licensed as a limited royalty-free library. You are limited to producing custom application sites. Each custom application site is defined to be a program which runs from a single physical location. So, as a software developer, you have a tool with which you can create scheduling abilities for clients. Each of these clients must not have access to the source code, but only the complied encrypted programs and data files. Each client can have as many users using the same complied code, as long as there is only one copy of the complied code at each client's site. This is a non-transferable license. If you would like to develop a commercial product please call Paradigm Technologies Corp. for a special licensing agreement.

At each custom application site, you must take adequate steps to ensure that the source code will be protected from being copied. This includes, but is not limited to: building EXE's and APP's with "debugging information" off and protecting the source code from being "decompiled" out of an application or EXE file.

For your custom applications, we have also provided you with all of our manuals in electronic form (Word for Windows). You may adapt these documents for you custom application sites, but these must still carry copyright notices. The documents fall under the license agreement and all restrictions and warranties apply to those documents as well.
